Who's on first at KYAC?

Black radio in trouble in Northwest

by A.M. Tipps

Black radio in the Northwest recently suffered the pains of a particularly acute case of laryngitis when KYAC-AM, Seattle left the air on April 15 ,1980. Fortunately a cure(?) was found fairly quickly, and the station resumed broadcasting five days later. This last, thanks in large measure to the students and staff of KTOY-FM, Tacoma, who voluntarily provided skeleton staffing for the duration.

By way of an update, current wisdom is divided on the state (or fate) of KYAC. Pat O'Day, owner and general manager of station KYYX-FM, Seattle and a station in Honolulu, is "pleased to see the station remain under minority ownership." Though Mr. O'Day believes it will be sold (to a Mr. Edwards of Oaklanf, California) he thinks it will remain a "strong voice in the Black Community." Mr. O'Day precipitated the KTOY involvement, using his strong ties to both stations to bring them together.

Most of the divergent factions currently involved in this drama do agree about one thing. Financial difficulties are at the root of the past and current operating problems. Item: the staff walked out after reportedly going paycheck-less for two months. Item: KYAC has a $1.7 million deficit. item: "for the last 10 years KYAC has always been in financial trouble."...Jimmy Pipkin, KYAC interim program director.

How does this happen to the only northwest purveyor of a major portion of a multi-billion dollar industry for ten straight years? Years during which major markets like New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, catapulted Black-owned and/or oriented radio stations to top ratings.

Pat O'Day thinks it was a combination of adverse influences including high interest rates and sluggish cash flow that pushed KYAC owner Don Dudley to the fiscal wall. That coupled with a low audience share in a highly competitive (43 stations) market, ultimately overwhelmed the management team at Dudley Communications--corporate owners of KYAC.

Jimmy Pipkin, current KYAC program director, is sure that "if we lose this station, this frequency; we'll never get another." This in part explains his return to the financially troubled station on a "voluntary" basis. Having begun his career with KYAC almost ten years ago, Jimmy P., as he likes to be called, expressed a combination of regret & optimism at the present state of affairs.

"It was highly unprofessional of the staff--I can understand the walk-out-- but not the shut down of the station. I was

TCD plans workshops

The City of Tacoma's Community Development Department has planned three neighborhood workshops so citizens can suggest improvements needed in three Tacoma neighborhoods.

Citizens from the Central, Southwest and Eastside areas are being asked to help form strategies that will guide the use of Community Development Block Grant funds in the future. Recommendations from the workshops will be compiled into policy statements for each area.

The Central area meeting will be held on May 13 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Miles Memorial Church, S. 16th and L streets. The Southwest meeting will be held May 15 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Asbury Methodist Church, 56th street and Puget Sound Avenue. The Eastside meeting will be held May 21 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Roosevelt Heights Christian Church, 2045 E. Sherman.

Individuals and neighborhood groups from these are encouraged to attend the open meetings and express their views about what improvements are needed in their area. If additional meetings are needed to complete the goal statements, the workshops will be held one week after the first workshops at the same time and location.

A list of preliminary goals has been compiled from previous public hearings and workshops as a guide for discussion at the workshops. Copies of the goals for each area are available upon request.

Anyone wanting more information on the workshops can contact the Community Development Department at 593-4660.

Funds for housing middle class voted

A strong push us under way in Congress to divert a portion of low-income housing funds into a new rental housing program for the middle class.

The plan, similar to one once considered by President Carter but then rejected, won the approval of a House subcommittee on housing this week and appears to have strong support in the full House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Similar ligislation is being sponsored by Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, who is chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

The proposed diversion of funds into middle-income housing reflects growing concern in Congress over the skyrocketing cost of fedrally subsidized rental assistance to the poor.

Representative Thomnas L. Ashley, Democrat of Ohio, who is the principal sponsor of the bill, noted that the Federal Government was already obligated to pay out $240 billion in the next 30 years for existing low-rent housing units for the poor.

Ashley said he was fully prepared for the onslaught of protests from welfare and social service groups, as well as from the more liberal wing of his own party.

While the White House is standing by its proposal for rental housing subsidies for the poor only, a spokesman said yesterday that the Administration was "now reviewing our position."

Under the Ashley plan, families with incomes of up to about $28,000 would be eligible for the new rental units. Currently, only those families with incomes of up to $16,000 a year are eligible for low-rent housing.

Under present law, poor families are required to pay no more than 25 percent of their income for rent. The Government pays the builder the rest of such costs as building, financing, taxes, upkeep and a reasonable, return on the investment.

For example, a family with a monthly income of $400 pays no more than $100 a month. If the unit costs the builder $500 a month, the Federal subsidy is $400.

By shifting toward middle-income families, the Federal subsidy would be trimmed. For example, if a family has a monthly income of $1,500, it would pay $300 or perhaps more a month for that same $500 unit.

I hope they (Mini Domelite Committee & City Council) will decide to put the Mini Dome downtown--it would do something great for downtown. "It is the policy of the United States to provide, within Constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States."

Title VIII, Civil Rights Act of 1968

Twelve full years have elapsed since passage of the 1968 Civil Rights Acts, and as we look about us, we see that the sucinct language of its fair housing provision has been too little recognized by many Americans.

Beyond the lettter of the law there is an underlying spirit which should appeal to every American's sense of fair play. Simply stated, all Americans have the right to live where they choose, when they choose, for as long as they can afford to do so, and each of us should promote and safeguard that right for all others. This is not just a simple tenet of democracy, it is a human canon as well.

In the twelve years since 1968, we have placed our interests and priorities in many areas. Practices and procedures that once divided the nation into enclaves of bigotry, smugness, and frustration have often been quietly put aside on the premise that all Amricans can and must live, work, and play together.

Yet, on the promise of fair housing, we have not shown the full wisdom and understanding to accompany our years.

Once again this year, the U.S. Congress is considering legislation which would strengthen the National Fair Housing Law and bring equal choice in housing a step closer for all Americans. The time for passage of this legislation is long overdue.

Inflation and high energy costs are already threatening to put home ownership out of reach for many Americans. Given these circumstances, we should redouble our efforts to remove the artificial barrier of discrimination from the housing marketplace so that all those who can afford a home of their own are guaranteed a free and equal opportunity to do so.

Furthermore, as we enter the final decades of the 20th Century we face awesome challenges. We must work together to rekindle the spirit of innovativeness that enabled us to surmount such challenges in the past. By assuring equal housing rights for all Americans, we can help forge the cooperative partnership we need to meet and master the challenges of the 80's

Fair housing is an American ideal--let us all work as individuals and as members of the American community to make fair housing a reality for everyone.

Food Facts.....

Home canning precations

Is there any way of knowing in advance if home-canned food is really safe to eat? Unless you know how the product was canned, there is no sure-fire method of telling, according to Olga V. Fuste', Washington State University's Pierce County Extension agent. However, there are some precautions you can and should take.

Look obvious signs of spoilage: bulging lids, cloudy canning liquid, or strange odor. Not all types of spoilage make food unsafe. Some just make it unpalatable so you may decide to discard it anyway. A bulging lid on a jar of home-canned fruit, vegetables, or meat could mean that a spoilage bacteria, including one that causes botulism are present. You should discard the vegetables or meat in a manner that will make it impossible for anyone to find and consume it. That applies to animals as well. This can be done by flushing it down the garbage disposal or toilet with lots of water. You also can dispose of it by burying it. In either case, wash out the leftover jar very thoroughly with hot, soapy water and rinse it with lot more hot water before using it again.

A harmless chemical reaction can also cause a lid to bulge, but such an occurence is not as common with glass jars as tin cans. But unless you are willing to pay for a laboratory analysis to find out the cause, it would be wise to dispose of the questionable food.

Cloudy canning liquid could mean several things. It could indicate that overmature vegetables were canned and starch is now present in the liquid. It also could mean that a salt containing an anti-cake agent was used in the canning process. Additives such as sodium silico aluminate prevent salt from caking in humid weather. Unfortunately, a cloudy canning liquid also could be an indication that bacteria are growing in the jar. Unless you can dismiss the first two possibilities, don't take a chance. Dispose of the questionable food.

A strange odor usually means the food will not taste right. It could be evidence of the presence of spoilage bacteria. Discard.

There should be no mold growing on canned foods or on the surface of the canning liquid. If mold is present on canned tomatoes, fruits, or pickles, acidity may have been reduced by the mold. This could lead to growth of spoilage or botulism-causing bacteria. Once again, discard.

Check the seal. The lid should be concave and should not move when pressed in the center. Lids that move are not properly sealed. This could lead to spoilagae because bacteria can enter through the opening. Air can cause some other undesirable changes as well.

Unfortunately, even if there are no obvious signs of spoilage, botulism toxin may be present unless the food was properly canned. Proper canning is your best assurance of food safety, good taste, and cost economy. Replacement costs will likely eat up any savings you achieve by canning at home.

If you are given home-canned products as a gift, find out if they were canned properly before eating them. You could save yourself and your family a lot of grief.

For an extra guarantee of safety before serving, boil home-canned vegetables 10 minutes before serving. Home-canned corn, spinach, meat, fish, and poultry must be boiled to a rolling boil for 15 minutes in a covered saucepan.

Boiling will destroy botulism toxin in the event something you were unaware of went wrong while you were canning. A malfunctioning gauge is an example.

TCD energy forum

A forum on how neighborhood groups and individuals can conserve energy and save on heating costs has been scheduled for May 17.

The "Energy and You" forum will be held in the new City Council Chambers on the First Floor of the Medical Arts Building, 740 St. Helens Ave. The forum will begin at 10 a.m. and last until about 4 p.m. It is being sponsored by the City's Community Development Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development regional office.

Mayor Mike Parker will open the session followed by John Jarstad from the Puget Sound Council of Governments.

The morning session will be devoted to methods of conserving energy and saving home heating costs. Representatives from the oil, gas, electric and solar industries will discuss various ways to conserve. A number of energy suppliers will have displays set up in the lobby of the building along with hand out materials that people can pick up.

The afternoon session will feature representatives from several energy conservation programs who will explain how people and groups can use the programs will be available to talk about how they have saved money through the programs.

For information about the forum, interested citizens can contact the Community Development Department at 593-4660.

Black is profitable...

The product is music, the industry is music and music is people; people making it, people selling it, and people buying it. Artists, musicians, technicians, promoters, agents, salespeople, all contribute to the process--the creative process.

Frankie Crocker is the program director of WBLS-FM, New York, the number one FM station in the United States. WBLS is owned by Inner City Communications and CEO Percy Sutton. According to Mr. Crocker, the station enjoys a strong segment of crossover listeners, due to, in his words, "creative programming," an inventive mixture of the many sounds of the Black musical tapestry. "Blues, Jazz, Disco, R&B, Fusion, and more contribute to our winning sound."

unhappy with this management at one time and for the same reasons. I know there was an alternative to shut down."

He went on to praise the KTOY students who manned the boards during the crisis, and continue to do so on a volunteer basis. Jimmy P. has; however, scant praise for Robert L. Scott, KYAC program director before the walkout. According to Jimmy KYAC has lost many listeners because of the predominance of "bubble-gum" music in the programming. "Adults buy records too, and lots of other stuff. The kid population is declining as the post war babies come of age, swelling the ranks of adulthood."

Jimmy went on to note that reliance upon one form of music was an insult to the enormous contribution of Black people to the popular music idiom.

Scholarship award

A scholarship award ceremony will be held on May 18, 1980 at 3:30 p.m. at the New Jerusalem Church of God in Christ, 1623 So. 11th St. The award will be an annual presentation of the Martin Luther King Progressive Women's Club. The Club was organized in October, 1979 by Mrs. Justine Brown and, its purpose is to encourage greater appreciation of the moral, ethical and spiritual ideals of Dr. King.

State says "W.I.N. is a winner"

Seattle....The Work Incentive Program saved taxpayers more than $25, 221,00 by placing 8229 present and potential Washington welfare recipients in unsubsidized employment last fiscal year (October 1978-September 30, 1979) according to Don Balcer, regional administrator of the U.S. Labor Department's Employment and Training Administration.

These savings represent only reductions in grants in Aid to Families with Dependent Children as a result of WIN registrants's employment. Additional savings were created by reductions in medical care and in food stamps for the families.

All persons 16 years of age or older who are receiving or applying for AFDC are required to register with WIN unless they are ill or incapacitated, and mothers caring for children under 6 years of age. WIN registrants are given help to locate suitable jobs and given needed training and help in overcoming such personal obstacles to employment as a need for day care for their children, lack of transportation, or health problems.

WIN is administered jointly by the Department of Labor and the Department of Health and Human Services (formerly HEW). About 70 percent of the operating costs are spent in employment and training activities, with the remainder going for supportive services to registrants who would not otherwise have been able to take jobs or training to prepare them for employment.

Summer jobs

Summer school for six weeks. After six weeks they will be placed in a job for the remainder of the Summer.

All young people who are economically disadvantaged and who live within the county, but outside the city limits, are eligible for S.Y.E.P. Applications are available at tions between work experience during the "teen" years and future success in school and the job market. The connections between early employment experiences and future employment success becomes more evident as an individual ages. Unfortunately, the problem also become more difficult to remedy as time passes.

Another segment of the program is Summer schooling. Young people who have dropped out of high school, or are behind in their credits, can earn money while attending junior and senior high schools and social service agencies. Or contact Pierce County Manpower Planning 593-4940 and ask for Tim O'Connell, Rich Kaufman, or Robin Barry.
